Dear DNR,

I am writing in opposition to diverting seven million gallons/day from Lake Michigan for Foxconn's purposes. The ability of the DNR and the EPA to do environmental impact testing has been decimated; therefore, we do not have the necessary scientific data necessary to properly evaluate this demand. Implications of this possible diversion could be disastrous to the Lake Michigan ecosystem, which would have grave consequences for our future and our children's and our children's children. The drinking water for millions of people comes from this lake. Water is the most precious commodity in the world. Much of the world is in drought. Climate change means so many unknowns for future weather. All these realities about the importance of our most precious resource, our water from Lake Michigan, compels you, the DNR, to not turnover our water to Foxconn. Don't rush. Do more testing and studies, not less. Our future depends on it.

Thank you.
