To Whom it May Concern:

I strongly urge the Department of Natural Resources to deny the diversion proposal. Foxconn is the reason Racine is applying for a straddling community diversion and according to the review process the diverted water has to be for public use. Foxconn is a foreign technology company and therefore the water will NOT be used by the public. Another concern is that the city is only asking for up to 7 million gallons a day. As a private company that has not been forthcoming about what types of chemicals and contaminates are going to end up in this water what is going to happen if/when the 7 million gallons is not enough?

I hope that the Wisconsin DNR can adhere to their mission and deny the diversion to "preserve and enhance the natural resources of Wisconsin".

Sincerely,

Amy Chaffee
