Dear Sir;

The extreme amount of water that will be used by Foxconn is not sustainable. While the water level of Lake Michigan may be high right now, just a few years ago it was at a record low. There is also no guarantee that the water that is returned will be clean and free of pollutants.

Lake Michigan is part of the largest supply of fresh water in the world, and is used by several states, not just Wisconsin. Have all of the states signed off in this proposal? How would Wisconsin feel if Michigan wanted to pull an equal amount of water out daily? How many states could do that? That fresh water must be carefully guarded.

Please consider very carefully before allowing this daily draw down of our precious water.

Sincerely,

Joanne Hesselink,
