The new compost rule [June 1, 2012] (s. NR 502.12, Wis. Adm. Code) allows a wider variety and greater quantity of food residuals to be accepted at licensed compost facilities. The law allows the composting of source-separated compostable materials, which are defined below.

This document distinguishes between the different sizes and types of facilities.

Definition of Source-Separated Compostable Material (SSCM)

“Source-separated compostable material” means compostable materials that are separated from non-compostable material at the point of generation for use in composting and are kept separate from municipal solid waste. Source-separated compostable material includes: food residuals; farm and non-farm crop residues; botanical residuals; aquatic plants; vegetative food processing residues such as those from cannery and brewing activities; fish harvesting and processing residuals; yard residuals; farm and herbivorous animal manure, excluding deer and elk manure, and associated animal bedding; clean chipped wood; clean sawdust; non-recyclable compostable paper; and other similar materials approved in writing by the department. This term does not include biosolids, domestic wastewater, sewage sludge or septage, high-volume industrial waste, rendering or slaughterhouse wastes, animal carcasses, other solid waste or hazardous waste.

Type of Facility	Facility Size	Requirements	Required Paperwork
Any Source-Separated Compostable Material (SSCM)	Less than 50 cubic yards (cy)	NR 502.04(1) NR 502.12(10)	Performance Standards Minimum Operational Standards  None
