Wisconsin annual wolf damage payment summary
Wolf depredation on domestic animals and other nuisance problems in 2010
The history of wolves in Wisconsin dated 5/18/11
Grey wolf population 2010-2011

Adrian Wydeven - the population has increased faster than anticipated, and our lack of control, most years, has not helped. More wolves equal more complaints in Wisconsin, and that equal more money spent on depredation complaints. Wolf/dog hybrid regulations enacted in July 2010 should reduce these types of animals on the landscape. Public comment period on delisting is open till September 26, 2011. The USFWS hopes to have them delisted by the end of the year. Wisconsin spent over $204,000 last year in depredation payments. APHIS spent $260,000 last year. This year the federal dollars have been dropped from the budget, more to come on how this works out. Wisconsin state management spent over $485,000 last year.
David Lopez WDNR endangered resources’ was introduced, he will replace Randy Jurewicz who recently retired.
Adrian Treves/Eric Olson UW Madison gave a report on how to predict high risk sites for wolf attacks on livestock and bear hunting dogs.
Adrian Treves-predictions using past data-affected sites vs. unaffected sites-find out why? There were 10 predictors, of which only 3 were good in this model. Grass/hay/pasture-distance to pack-distance to forest. With this model we could predict problems 88% of the time. How can we use this info? The info can empower local action and put risk in perspective. You could also use it to put harvest season zones in high risk areas
Eric Olson-his model predicted correctly 89% of risk for hunting dog depredation. And shows that 82% of the study area has very low risk.

• Dave Oginski WDNR LE – not much new for now. Waiting for a change in status. Illegal wolf kill –Wisconsin =$2000 to $11,000- federal up to $250,000 and jail time (9 months in jail and 3 year revocation of license) the courts will make the decision the topic of a wolf harvest will need to be discussed with the tribes, if a harvest is in the ceded territory the tribes can have 50% of the harvest. The tribes will be consulted about any future wolf season/harvest.
