Stopping illegal Killing & Injury of Wildlife

Bald eagles, common loons, trumpeter swans and gray wolves are cherished wildlife species in Wisconsin. Conservationists rescued eagles from a major pesticide threat that decimated their population, successfully restored trumpeters, and worked to protect critical loon habitats. The illegal killing or purposeful injuring of these protected, nongame species is offensive to most Wisconsinites and contrary to years of conservation efforts. Sadly, wildlife rehabilitators in Wisconsin have seen a surge in eagle shootings in the last couple of years. Often these shootings kill the eagle immediately, but some struggle in a wounded condition unable to fly or feed. Wildlife rehabilitators become the emergency center for any of these wounded birds that are found and brought to them. The REGI rehab center of Antigo had 27 such eagle patients in 2021. In addition to the eagles, 4 trumpeter swans were illegally shot and killed at Mead Wildlife Area last fall. LoonWatch at Northland College, Ashland, has also reported loons are also being targeted, as well as, harassed at nesting sites. Although many of these incidents are reported to WDNR and USFWS enforcement, rarely are the perpetrators caught and punished. It’s time for hunters, anglers, birders and other conservationists to work with WDNR and USFWS to and bring a halt to these illegal acts. The first step is creating an awareness campaign to make the public aware of this problem and how they can help prevent further illegal killing or injuring of wildlife.

Do you support the Conservation Congress working with WDNR, USFWS and other conservation groups to create an awareness campaign on illegal killing and injuring of wildlife?
