

Citizen Resolution # 132222

(For Hearing Officer completion)

Give Coyotes Protections from Year- Round Open Season Hunting

Coyotes provide a number of positive ecological services that contribute to clean and healthy urban and rural communities, including forests, grasslands and agriculture, where they are present. Their primary diet is rodents that transmit diseases, including Lyme and hantavirus (Watts, 2014). Keeping rodent populations in check also protects against crop loss. As scavengers, coyotes help keep local ecosystems clean of carrion. As the top carnivore they limit the number of egg-eating mesopredators (skunks, fox, possum, raccoons) of ground-nesting birds (Mezquida 2006) such as the state-threatened prairie chicken. By exclusion competition, the presence of coyotes increases the number and diversity of songbirds (Crooks and Soule 1999). Coyotes begin mating in February, forming a long-lasting, often monogamous relationship. Pups are born in April/May. The adult pair are devoted parents, both hunting and bringing food to the den and raising them until Fall (Green 1994). A science-based hunting season considers protections of a species during denning and raising of young. The DNR established a hunting season for some furbearing animals. The season for coyotes is open year-round, with day and night hunting, with NO protections. Breeding females and pups in the den can be hunted. Furbearing Animal Hunting Seasons (DNR-PUB-WM-153-2022): Raccoons-Residents Oct. 16 - Feb. 15. Raccoons-Nonresidents Oct. 30 - Feb. 15. Fox-Red and Gray Oct. 16 - Feb. 15. Coyote Year-round open hunting season. The North American Model of Wildlife Conservation adheres to the principal that any animal harvested is used in some way: meat, pelt. S.29.337(1) WILL NOT CHANGE allowing property owners to hunt or remove nuisance wildlife, without a license.

Do you want the DNR to establish a hunting season for the coyote which falls in line with the fox and resident raccoon hunting season? If you agree with this change, it will be illegal to hunt adult coyotes who have nursing pups.
